Title: India from Colony to Nation Topic: This course will look at the post-colonial processes of nation and state formation in South Asia after the end of British Imperialism. We will focus on the creation of legal and administrative state institutions, the assertion of territorial boundaries, questions of citizenship and identity, and legitimizing discourses of newly created nation-states. We will explore how anticolonial nationalist movements, the trauma of partition, and the post-World War II international order affected processes of nation and state formation in India and Pakistan after formal independence. We will also consider various forms of resistance to nation and state formation.
