Restricted to Students in the History Honors Program. Meets with HIST 498, Section: A. Title: Homes and Housing in the United States, 1800-2000 Topic: What is a home, when, where, and for whom? What different kinds of structures and built environments provided homes in U.S. history? What kinds of social relations, laws and politics shaped distinctive interior housing and exterior surroundings in the regions, towns, neighborhoods, cities and suburbs where they were located? These questions can lead us to important insights about daily lives, values, politics in the past. Histories of housing also illuminate social relations across a range of social distinctions such as class, race, ethnicity, gender and sexuality. Often regarded as the location of "private" life, the history of housing also demonstrates the porous and historically contingent character of lines people draw between what is "private" and "public." This senior research seminar will address these questions through readings on the spatial organization, social relations, laws, politics, and cultural associations surrounding housing and homes in the United States from the early nineteenth century to the late twentieth century. It will examine varieties of types of housing and the social and political relations that shaped them and their change over time. We will also sample primary documents related to homes and housing. The course will guide students through research projects on homes, housing, and residential space resulting in a final original research paper.
