Challenges Facing Euro Union
Restricted to Undergrad - Urbana-Champaign.
Contemporary Challenges facing the European Union. This course explores topics of contemporary importance to the European Union. These topics are methodically examined through theoretical, historical, national, supranational, and international frames. One topic will be explored each semester this course is offered, and this topic will rotate at the instructor's discretion. Sample topics include immigration, aging populations, the digital single market, energy unions, climate change, Euroscepticism, and more. The class will conclude with a capstone project involving an institutional simulation of a key European Union institution. This simulation will allow students to experience how such problems get solved in real life. No pre-requisites, repeatable only for different topics.

Eastern Europe & EU Integration

Comparative Politics of European Union Enlargement this course examines the incentives and disincentives to join the EU in historical perspective, with a focus on how those incentives and disincentives changed across time and region, from the first members in the 1950s to the present and how enlargement has influenced EU politics and decisionmaking. Why do countries join a supranation body? Topics covered include the tension between elite and mass attitudes on the issue of joining, the use of referendum as a general tool and as an enlargement component, the politics of rejection (Iceland, Norway and Switzerland) and the role of Germany and France as founders and arbiters, British exceptionalism: delayed entrance and Brexit.
